Widex Phone Dex

Widex have just launched their very own landline telephone which is compatible with their range of wireless clear hearing aids. Having a hearing loss can cause problems with the simplest of tasks such as communicating on your home telephone with friends and family.

Too often people with a hearing loss who even wear hearing aids can find great difficulty while listening on the telephone, even to the point that when the phone rings there is a reluctance to answer it through fear of not being able to hear the speaker properly. This can be because the hearing aid wearer cannot align the microphone of the hearing aid to the right position of the telephone receiver.

Although there are bluetooth compatible landline telephones on the market, Widex have designed and built their own home telephone to allow the user to have the speaker's voice on the telephone to be streamed directly to the hearing aids.

Widex hearing aids are regarded as one of the most advanced and up to date solutions on the market today.

This is a 'Plug and Play' phone with no matching required and can be used by the whole family.
